

Turner Syndrome affects 1 in 2,000 girls.
We can help.

www.TSFUSA.org

These are some of the possible indications for Turner Syndrome:

- 4'8" average untreated height
- ovarian failure
- infertility
- heart abnormality
- hearing infection and hearing loss
- kidney issues
- urinary tract infections
- type II diabetes
- lymphedema
- hypertension
- hypothyroidism
- osteoporosis
- scoliosis and bone issues
- dental problems
- high arched palate
- pigmented moles and dry skin
- overweight
- upturned fingernails
- low set ears
- low set hairline
- wide short neck
- broad shield chest
- wide spaced nipples
- lazy drooping eyelids
- cataracts
- education difficulties
- social issues
- anxiety

Possible indications during stages of development:

- Infants: small size, puffy hands and feet, extra neck skin folds, heart abnormalities, feeding difficulties
- Children: small size in relation to peers, below the "normal" growth chart for both height and weight, ear infections, hearing problems, learning difficulties
- Teens: small stature, delayed puberty with no breast tissue development or menses, social issues
- Adults: small stature, menstrual cycle irregularities, infertility, hearing issues, heart problems, hypertension, hypothyroidism, type II diabetes, osteoporosis